About the National Archives

Central Plains Region

The National Archives Central Plains Region holds the retired records of federal agencies in Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, North Dakota, and South Dakota. Our 42,000 cubic feet of records range in date from the 1820s to the 1990s. We hold records of many agencies, including United States District Courts, the National Park Service, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and the Bureau of Prisons, to name but a few.

In addition to making original textual and audiovisual records available for research, we are a center for genealogical research with a vast microfilm collection. We sponsor public programs, history conferences, and exhibits. NARA's Central Plains Region partners with universities, genealogical societies, and veterans groups on a regular basis. We also offer training to interns and others interested in archival methodology.

We work to preserve and make available the historical documents created by federal agencies.

One of the goals of NARA's Central Plains Region is to assist students in using these records in the classroom and research. If you have any questions about locating primary sources, please contact archival staff.
